THOMAS A. DAVIS IS DEAD

Veteran Editor and Leader in City's Civic and Business Life Passed Away
Suddenly at His Home in West Second Street Last Evening

Thomas A. Davis died Tuesday night, at 7:30 o'clock, at his residence on West Second street, and while it has been known for some time that he was not enjoying the best of health, it was not thought that his condition was serious, and his death comes as a distinct shock to his many friends and associates.

Thomas A. Davis was born in Maysville, Ky., on the seventeenth day of January, 1840, and his early life was spent here. He attended the schools of this city until the age of 15 years, when he learned the printer's trade in Louisville, and was engaged in business there for two years.

In 1858 he went to Washington, where he was employed on the Congressional Globe, afterward going to Philadelphia, where he had charge of city printing for two years; resigning that position, he moved to Dover, Del., and was placed in charge of the state printing, which position he held for one year.

On the 29th of April, 1861, Mr. Davis enlisted at Philadelphia, in Company C, Second Pennsylvania Reserve Corps, but owing to his ill health, he was, on August 8, 1861, honorably discharged from active service and accompanied the Army of the Potomac as war correspondent of the Philadelphia Inquirer until January 26, 1864, when he enlisted with Company L, Twentieth Pennsylvania Cavalry, as a private. He served as a member of this command, riding with honor and distinction under Sherman, to the end of the war and by faithful and conspicuous bravery was successively promoted to Quartermaster-Sergeant and to Adjutant, which rank he held at the time he was mustered out of the service at Clouds Mills, Va., on July 13, 1865.

In 1866 Mr. Davis returned to Maysville and read law with the late Harrison Taylor until 1867, when he engaged in the newspaper business, founding the Maysville Republican, and, in 1862, he founded The Daily Public Ledger. His success as an editor and newspaper manager was assured from the first, and by his fair dealing and the masterful manner in which he discussed every question of interest to the public, he soon established an enviable position for his paper, which he maintained throughout his conspicuous career at its head.

He fought successfully through the columns of The Ledger for free turnpikes in Mason county; aided in building the C. O. railway; was on the building committee that erected the first tobacco warehouse in the East End, and was the original owner of the Maysville Telephone Company's franchise. He always stood at the front when it came to pushing Maysville's interests.

On January 7, 1868, Mr. Davis married Miss Lavina Virginia Martin, and while no children were born to bless this union, his home life was as sweet, as mild and as beautiful as his business and professional career was rugged, forceful and brilliant. Mrs. Davis died three years ago and Mr. Davis never fully recovered from her death.

In January, 1907, Mr. Davis sold The Public Ledger to Mr. A. F. Curran, but retained the control and management of the job printing department until a few years ago, when, owing to his failing health, he disposed of that also to Mr. Curran, and devoted himself entirely to his nieces, who, since the death of Mrs. Davis, have been his constant companions, looking after his every want and doing all within their power to fill the great void in later years.

Mr. Davis was a public spirited citizen in every sense of the word and ever took prominent part in everything for the advancement of Maysville. He was postmaster under President Harrison, and under his administration the first carrier service was inaugurated.

He also served the Federal government as Collector of Internal Revenue, and during his term the efficiency of that office was greatly increased.

He was a charter member of the Washington Fire Company, and was one of its oldest members, helping for many years its president. He was chairman of the building committee that built the Washington Opera House.

In 1908 he was appointed State Labor Commissioner by Governor Wilson, which position he filled with credit to himself and the department until he resigned. He was a Thirty-second Degree Mason and a member of the Elks, Redmen, Knights SAY, Farmer Folks, it's worth your while to turn the paper sideways to see the picture of the NEW TIGER TOBACCO SETTER. It's a wonder, Chuck full of new improvements, and the best tobacco transplanter on the market today. Drop in and let's talk it over.

He is the last member of that band of heroes in honor of whom the soldiers' monument was erected in the Maysville cemetery, and was most energetic in causing it to be erected, giving to that cause every financial aid within his means and never ceasing his untiring efforts until he had realized his heart's desire.

Mr. Davis was a man of infinite compassion, of comprehensive sympathies, of noble and unselfish impulse. He was a partisan without rancor, an untagonist without bitterness, and a friend without reservations or conditions. With a heart where charity abode always, his first thought was ever of his duty toward others, and the Kentucky youth may well study his life in a spirit of reverence and emulation for as long as men admire courage, self-sacrifice, devotion and high sense of duty, so long will the memory of Thomas A. Davis be held in honor and affection.

The funeral services will be held on Friday, the hour to be announced later.

RUMORED SHOOTING.

The residents of the West End were awakened Tuesday evening by the report of a pistol shot and Wednesday morning rumors are in the air that a young lady has been shot by a man, formerly prominent in the affairs of this city. The rumor, however, can not be verified and a veil of mystery surrounds the affair.

GUARDING MEAT FROM HEAT

A Few Simple Precautions For the Housewife Who Does Not Want Her Supplies To Spoil.

Washington, D. C.—A few simple precautions will aid the housewife in keeping meat unspoiled in hot weather. It is, of course, common knowledge that the higher the temperature the quicker the meat will spoil, but the family's supplies are not absolutely at the mercy of the thermometer. Ice and cleanliness are two great weapons of defense.

For many families a refrigerator is obviously out of the question, but it is perhaps better to have no refrigerator at all than a neglected one. Merely to wash it out occasionally does little good; it should be thoroughly scalded at frequent intervals, in particular the drain. This, if overlooked, is apt to harbor fungous growths, which may spread to the food. On one occasion a man applied to the Department of Agriculture because he had found that a joint of beef placed in his refrigerator had turned a peculiar bright red. Upon examination it was ascertained that the meat was covered with a peculiar fungous growth due entirely to the condition of the refrigerator. Growths of this kind do not always advertise themselves so prominently and there may be much evil in an ice box that the eye can not detect.

If the refrigerator drain is not thoroughly cleaned, moreover, it is likely to become clogged, the water is not carried off quickly enough and little pools are left standing in the interior. Dampness is one of the conditions most favorable to bacterial growth. An ice box in this state will not protect food long. It is, in fact, a wise precaution to wipe the interior of a refrigerator every day with a dry cloth.

The temperature of the average refrigerator is higher than most persons suppose, and in those households where a regular supply of ice is not obtainable, a cool cellar, a spring house or the depths of a well may serve somewhat the same purpose. On farms where there is an ice house, the meat may be placed in some form of closed retainer and buried in the ice. In any event, the meat must be carefully screened from flies. The danger from infection from these pests has been pointed out many times, but familiarity breeds contempt and they still persist. They not only do the meat itself no good but it may readily deposit upon it some infection, which is carried in turn by the meat into the human system. Some flies will deposit their eggs on the meat and these in a short time will become maggots and the meat is "fly-blown."

Much sickness that is popularly ascribed to ptomaine poisoning or to bad food in general is really caused in some such way as this, the food, in itself perfectly wholesome, acting merely as a mechanical carrier for the "germs" which cause the trouble. Some of these sorts come from the human intestine and their presence is a sure indication that filth is present, even if the amount is too small to be seen. Filth of this kind may be carried by dust, but it more often comes from soiled hands. One might wish that every kitchen could have the sign found in some well-managed food factory—"When you leave the room for any purpose, wash your hands before you return to work."

"Germs" which grow in foods and cause illness grow very rapidly, particularly if the food is a little warm, and are not destroyed unless the food is well cooked before serving. Simply "warming up" is not enough, as was found in a case of illness recently reported after eating some warmed up creamed vegetables. Certain kinds of food—cream chicken, or custard, or warm vegetables, for example—are excellent culture mediums for bacteria which may have been introduced into them by accident. For this reason it is a safe rule to have as short a time as possible intervene between the preparation of food and its consumption. Broth is another excellent medium and in consequence should be drained off if it is intended to keep the meat for any length of time before serving. If the broth is used also, it should be boiled before serving. All food, cooked or uncooked, should be kept in a clean, cool place in order to reduce the danger of infection to a minimum.

When meat must for any reason be kept for unusually long periods of time or when the conditions are unusually unfavorable, sealing may be resorted to advantageously. Dropping the meat into boiling water for a few minutes will not seriously affect its flavor when it ultimately appears upon the table, and it will put it in a much better condition for keeping. It is important, however, that it be dipped in a large body of boiling water. If only a small amount of water is used, the introduction of the meat will lower the temperature to such an extent that the whole process becomes worthless. With such meats as veal or pork, which are always—or ought to be—thoroughly done, the preparation can be carried further and the joints partially cooked before being stored away. Care should be taken, however, to see that the re-cooking is thoroughly done.

Hot weather also calls for additional precautions on the part of the housewife in regard to canned products. Once these have been opened and exposed to the air, they spoil as quickly—if not more quickly—than fresh food. The contents of a can should therefore be disposed of without delay. In no event should they be left in the can after it has been opened, but should be used at once unless the housekeeper wishes to "air" the canned material, which some believe is desirable. If this is done, the can contents should be transferred to a clean earthen or glass dish and put away for an hour or two in a cool place where dust will not reach it.

DOOR WEDGE RINGS A BELL.

Placing a wedge under a door is one of the most effectual means of closing it, for pushing upon the door from the outside only increases the effect of the wedge.

A convenient device of this kind is made of metal, says the Scientific American, and it not only serves to wedge the door, but also contains a mechanical bell mounted on the same base and behind the wedge in such a way that pressure on the face of the wedge causes the bell to ring. The base carries a set of short points underneath, so that it can be put in place and gripped upon the carpet or flooring so as not to slide out of position. Such a device can be carried in the pocket and it is recommended for traveling.

A GOOD THING

When It Comes Along Don't Let It Get Away From You.

"I really feel that it is hardly possible to say too much in favor of Grape-Nuts as a health food," writes a Chicago lady.

"For 9 or 10 years I had suffered from indigestion and chronic constipation, caused by the continued use of coffee and rich, heavy foods. My ailments made my life so wretched that I was eager to try anything that held out a promise of help. And that is why I happened to buy a package of Grape-Nuts last spring."

"That ended my experiments. In grape-Nuts I found exactly what I wanted and needed. From the day I began to use it I noticed an improvement and in a very few weeks I found my health was being restored."

"My digestive apparatus now works perfectly and chronic constipation has been entirely relieved. I have gained in weight materially, and life is a very pleasant thing to me so long as I use Grape-Nuts once or twice a day. I have found by experiment that if I leave it off for a few days my health suffers."

"A physician in our town has great success in treating stomach troubles, and the secret of it is that he puts his patients on Grape-Nuts food—it always brings back the power of digestion."

gent" was enacted on the athletic field. The athletic field, with its natural setting, part of which is forest where the Indian village was located, was especially suited for this most interesting pageant.

Wednesday, commencement Day, was the crowning day, with its diversified attractions and the tremendous crowd. A cannon fired at the end of each home denoting change of program. The exercises closed at 4:30 p.m., with the singing by Harmonia of the "Hallelujah Chorus" from "Messiah," which seemed a fitting close to ten days of intensely interesting exercises.

GREAT PEACE TREATIES

Treaty of Ryswick, Ending the "Grand Alliance" War.

A wrinkled little man, who wore high heels to eke out his height and a large wig to add dignity to his hook-nosed face, once declared "the State is U!" and he set out to prove it.

He was Louis XIV, King of France, known to history as "the Grand Monarch;" and at once one of the greatest and one of the prettiest men in all French history. He had had the wit to surround himself with men far greater than he; so that the first half of his reign was France's golden age. Literature, art, music and statesmanship flourished at his court. His generals won him thousands of miles of new territory. All Europe trembled under his lash, as later under Napoleon.

But as time went on, he found himself in the position of many another celebrity who has lived for self and not for mankind. The men who had made his reign glorious were dying off. The wicked and beautiful women who had adorned his court were either dead or were now only wrinkled and old.

Then it was that Europe combined against him.

William III, King of England, made war on France, as a check to Louis' boundless ambition, and Spain, Germany, Holland and several lesser powers promptly allied themselves with England.

Thus, in 1689, began the bloody "War of the Grand Alliance," France alone against nearly all the rest of the civilized world.

For eight years the war continued. It raged from one end of Europe to the other. It crossed into America. It was fought on many seas. Half the continent was swept by it.

Oddly enough, France won almost every battle; yet, yearly, France grew weaker while the allies waxed stronger. Peace overtures were made in 1696. But the King of England angrily rejected them, saying:

"We will make a treaty only with swords in our hands!"

"Yet the next year the King of Sweden interceded so effectively for peace that both sides agreed to a conference. The French delegates made headquarters at The Hague. The allies' commissioners were quartered at Delft. And the conference itself was held at the Netherlands town of Ryswick.

Months of futile dispute and argument followed, leading nowhere. At last, it was agreed to leave the whole affair in the hands of one English and one French commissioner. These two men quickly came to an understanding and the Treaty of Ryswick was drawn up and ratified. Each of the allies had demanded a share in the spoils, while France, still unbroken, snarled over every concession she was forced to make.

By the final terms the treaty demanded that Louis acknowledge William III as lawful King of England and cease giving aid to William's fallen rival, James II.

Thus France gave back to Spain all the fallen territory snatched from her by the French armies of late years, cede to Germany the Duchy of Lorraine and certain Rhine cities, and give back several captured Netherland fortresses to Holland.

In return, France was merely allowed to keep Strasbourg and some other districts of Alsace which Louis had seized in 1681 and effectively carried out by the children. The afternoon was given over to the Foundation School, when the "Daniel Boone Pageant" was enacted on the athletic field. The adventures of Boone and his followers were portrayed from the first coming to Kentucky to the founding of Boonesboro, including the repeated attacks by the Indians. The athletic field, with its natural setting, part of which is forest where the Indian village was located, was especially suited for this most interesting pageant.

We have always beaten the enemy in this war. Yet we have made a peace that dishonors our king and our nation."

SEALED PROPOSALS

Sealed bids will be received by the Mayor and Board of Council of the City of Maysville, Ky., until 5 o'clock, p.m., Monday, July 5, 1915, at the Council Chamber, for the construction of an 18-inch sewer and appurtenances, in East Second street from Lexington street to Poplar street, and in Poplar street from Second street to the Ohio river; together with the construction of manholes and lamp-holes along the 18-inch sewer from Lexington street to Houston street, and the disconnecting of certain catch-basins from the present 12-inch line. A certified check in the sum of $50, payable to the City Treasurer, must accompany each bid. Bids must be made on blank form which will be furnished by the city. Specifications and plans and estimate of quantities can be seen at the City Clerk's office. The Council reserves the right to reject any or all bids.
